

A ventriloquist, an illusionist and a doctor walk into a bar...

It may sound like the setup for a joke, but three performers from wildly different backgrounds are putting on an unusual show next week at Tony Starr's Kitten Club. Each performer is trialling new material live in preparation for big upcoming shows.

Sarah Jones is Melbourne's most endearing ventriloquist, refining her material in preparation for first solo theatre show in July. Vyom Sharma is a part time medical doctor and part time magician, who will be performing in the Edinburgh Fringe Festival in August. Simon Coronel is a world championship close-up illusionist, about to take his hit show Manipulations to the Hollywood Fringe Festival in June.

In the quiet time that follows the Melbourne Comedy Festival, these three unusual performers are taking the chance to work on their material in preparation for their respective quests.

The shows will be open to the public, the tickets will be a measly $10, and audiences will have a chance to see three performers each about to go on an amazing journey.
